

April 3, 2017

Each of us will be patients during our lives. By extension, all members of society have a stake in improving the safety of our health care system. Successful implementation of a public health response to prevent health care harm requires coordination and partnership among all stakeholders, including government agencies, health care organizations, insurers, foundations, industry and other private sector organizations, as well as policymakers, patients and families, health care leaders, health professionals, and other members of the health care workforce. Learn more about the NPSF Call to Action.